

Abstract

The nutritional status of 327 young Jordanian adults was evaluated using the following indicators : anthropometrics, blood pressure, and energy balance. The significant associations between these indicators give evidence for their relevance in the evaluation of the nutritional status. The normal values of used indicators suggest that a healthy nutritional status was found among young Jordanians.